DT Iraqi Flatbreads

We made Iraqi flatbreads yesterday for dinner. We have been learning about the 'Golden age of Islam' so we made something that they would have eaten and people still eat today.

I followed the recipe and it took 20 minutes altogether.

They were easy to make until it became super sticky!

We left the dough for 10 minutes. Then the fun part rolling them out and cooking them.

I was careful and enjoyed cooking them with Mum's help. I made 4 big ones and one tiny one.

We ate them with curry and rice. They tasted like the naan breads we usually have. I really enjoyed them, they were delicious and wanted more.

I will definitely make them again, but next time I will double the recipe so it makes more because they were yummy!
